

Food!

Plainfield Public Library Pathfinder

June 2010

If you're looking to cook your next meal, or just want to learn about how the food industry works, the Plainfield Public Library has you covered.

If you're looking to cook a meal for you or your family, the library has many books to fit your tastes and diets. For basic cooking, try Cooking Secrets My Mother Never Taught Me by Joni Hilton (641.597 Hil) because nobody cooks better than, because nobody cooks better than mom. For a good book covering all those ethnic foods from Chinese to Mexican, try It's All American Food by David Rosengarten (641.597 Ros).

When you're read to move onto dessert, you can't wrong with chocolate. Chocolate: a love story: 65 chocolate dessert recipes from Max Brenner's private collection by Max Brenner (OVERSIZE 641.337 CHO) will satisfy your craving.

For those who vegetarian meals, try Vegetarian times complete cookbook by Alexandra Greeley (641.563 VEG 2005). For others who prefer low calorie meals The Best Life Diet Cookbook by Bob Greene (641.563 GRE) is a good choice.

Michael Pollan is no stranger to food. His insightful foods on food and the industry will have you rethinking what you buy. His book The Omnivore's Dilemma (394.12 POL), goes through how America gets its food for good or for ill.

The Internet has lots of good cooking sites. The Food Network's website www.foodnetwork.com has all the recipes from your favorite shows. One of the most famous and widely used sites is www.epicurious.com, which as has articles, recipes and forums to talk to others from around the world. And of course, you can't go wrong with www.bettycrocker.com.
